

Lollipop. Sucker. Lolly. Sticky pop. Whatever you call them, Lollipop Day falls on July 20. Scientists tell us that even early humans enjoyed these treats, licking and sucking on honey on a stick. The term lollipops wasn't used until 1931 when George Smith, owner of the Bradley Smith confectionary company, named a stick candy after his favorite racehorse, Lolly Pop. Some dispute this origin, however, because in England the word lolly means "tongue" and pop means "slap," so some think that the word lollipop, meaning "tongue slap," may have originated in England.

As to the invention of the lollipop itself, some say that in 1905 the McAviney Candy Company may have accidentally invented this hard candy on a stick. The process of boiling the candy required stirring with a stick. At the end of the day, the owner brought the candy-covered sticks home for his children. Three years later, he finally realized he was on to something and began marketing his "used candy sticks."

Life Enrichment for All

“Curiosity is one of the great secrets of happiness.”

- Bryant H. McGill

This quote reminds to find out more...more about you, more about an event, more about what I don't know! Curiosity also keeps me interested, always asking, "And?". It might not only be one of the keys to happiness, but also to staying connected. We have lots to going on here at Emerald, maybe there's something for you to come find out about!

Come see for yourself 😊

-Rita
