August is the eighth month of the year in the Julian and Gregorian calendars, although it once was the sixth month in the 10-month Roman calendar. Around 700 BC, Pompilius filled the winter period with two new months, January and February. In 45 BC, Julius Caesar added two days to August, changing its length from 29 days to 31. Caesar was very fond of this month, because he had accomplished many great things during this time of year.
